Read by myself and my daughter. Review by my daughter Bethany aged 7.

I really enjoyed this book especially the letters between the characters.

My favorite part was when Stanley was playing in the snow and Katrina was watching through the window. I found it funny when Stanley was running around his owner in circles and when he dug a tunnel.

The part I disliked the most was when they misbehaved at the pet show, but I wouldn't change it as every good story needs to have its problems as well as a start and funny part and an end.

I would definitely recommend this book to my friends.

Confession- I know the author and I am so proud of her. This kid is going to go places! The book is clever and funny. I wonder if my dog and cat communicate like this when we're not watching.

Erik This Kid Reviews Books says

Katrina Von Cat, Master of Wisdom and Knowledge, has had it with the dog eating her food all the time. Katrina realizes that they have been living in the same house for a while and she really hasn't bothered to find out the dog's name. So she writes a letter to the dog to ask his name and that he stop eating her food. Stanley (the dog) says the letter is nice, but he won't stop eating her food. Katrina decides to take Stanley to kitty court! And that's just the start of the trouble they cause!

This story was extremely well written! The way it starts out with the cat and dog writing letters to each other is unique and also hysterical (the letter writing continues through the book)! I love the plot idea of two pets living in the same house for years and pretty much ignoring each other until the one starts eating the other's food. The characters (Stanley and Katrina) were great and there are other great characters like Mandy the bluebird and Mr. Fluffypants a guinea pig that lives next door who thinks he's an astronaut, so he calls himself "Zorg." I also love the story being told through the POV on the animals. This is a VERY fun book! **NOTE I got a free copy of this book in exchange for an honest review.

Highly original. Very entertaining. A great fun 'tail' that delves into the minds of ... a dog ... and a cat.

A dog and a cat have lived in the same house for three years, but they have shown little, or no interest, in getting to know each other. Then one day the cat decides to write to the dog to find out his name. This starts a tennis match of simple but clever letters between the two. Both animals attempt to keep their distance from the other, with the initial tone of the letters being very formal in nature. Dog, apparently likes to eat cat's food. This is one of the events that ultimately brings the two closer than just mere pets that share the same owners. Over the course of the book their relationship grows until in the end they are .... (I'm not telling you).

My favourite lines:

*Stanley exclaimed, 'So that's where my bone went!'
'Yep, he is the secretary.' said Katrina.*

A great fun read for anyone who would like to see the relationship between a cat and dog from a different perspective.

Note: I don't claim to be a pro-reviewer, I am a reader. My reviews are based on my personal thoughts around the story that the book is trying to tell. I'd rather focus on the story (which is the reason I read) rather than dissect the book and pass comment on writing style, structure or typos.

Jemima Pett says

Katrina von Cat, The Master of Wisdom and Knowledge, lives comfortably in her house, living by her own rules, and contemplating what to do about the newcomer. After three years she decides she must break silence and ask him his name and breed, and tell him to stop eating her food. She does so by letter, and so begins The Perpetual Papers of the Pack of Pets. Stanley replies (by letter) that he is a black Labrador/Rottweiler cross, and no, he won't stop eating her food. Katrina escalates the feud but it all ends happily enough and the pets rub along, even enjoying each other's company at times.

The story is wittily told through the exchange of letters with occasional interruptions from a narrator, whose role is then usurped by a neighbouring bluebird, a guinea pig and even Stanley and Katrina themselves. The characterisation is first class, most of the writing is excellent, with believable narrative and situations at once instantly recognisable and refreshingly new. The author has a knack of showing the mundane through a fresh pair of eyes, making the reader delight in a different perspective on familiar themes – like the Christmas tree and playing in snow.

My boys have asked me to read them their favourite bit many times, but then, they didn't know any other guinea pigs in literature and have become firm fans of astronaut Zorg.

The Pet Paper (from Kitty Hall) near the end was a masterstroke of twist in the tale, and I'm looking forward to the next episode from Stanley and Katrina's pen. Well done to their trainers!

Love it. It continues to make me laugh out loud.

I am proud to disclose that I am related to the author so yeah, I guess that makes me biased. :)

What a delightful read. A hilarious glimpse into the mind of one super smart cat and her preciocious pet partner Stanley.

I love the conversation between the two and found myself laughing out loud on many occasions throughout the book.

My favourite Quote from Katrina von Cat The Master of Widom and Knowledge: She believed cats had the best taste of any animal in the entire world. She would not dare say the entire universe because aliens are much better at interior designing. Priceless!!!!

The Pet Paper depicting the "Best In Show" for Hampster, Guinea Pig, Dog and Cat of which Stanley and Katrina proudly were disqualified from is so fabulous.

It is beyond my comprehension that this book was written by a 10 year old, yes, you heard me, one super smart, intelligent 10 year old.

Watch this space for this author folks, I am sure she will dazzle us again some time soon.

The innermost thoughts of cats and dogs? Hmm, exactly as I suspected ... there is a lot that goes on between those furry ears! I thought this was great fun and I really enjoyed the way that bossy Katrina Von Cat and Stanley the dog gradually join forces after years of merely cohabiting in the same household. I'll be looking forward to the next instalment in "The Perpetual Papers".

Debra says

This was a fun read. Congratulations on this writing debut. The author clearly knows pets and their behavior. My favorite part was the antics of the pets over the Christmas tree and its unfortunate accident. I thought it was hilarious when the dog pulled his bed away from the fallen tree and back to its original place and then both pets acted as if nothing had happened. So believable.

Lots of laughs. I am sure that the author will have other books in her future.

Sibel Hodge says

This is a fun read that kids are sure to love. It tells the adventures of Katrina the cat and Stanley the dog, who have a love/hate relationship, but have to put up with each other because they're in the same household. As well as being witty and great fun, It also tells an important tale of how they can put aside their differences to work together. With some funny side characters like Zorg the Hamster, who thinks he's an astronaut, this will have you chuckling away out loud!

Have you ever wondered if cats and dogs who live under the same roof really get along? Do you ever stop to think what they truly think of one other? Have you considered how your cats and dogs navigate daily challenges such as preventing each other from eating their food, or deal with common adversaries such as the household vacuum cleaner and the vet?

If so, you will love The Perpetual Papers Of The Pack Of Pets – a highly original chapter book in which two household pets share their perspective on various aspects of their lives!

The Perpetual Papers Of The Pack Of Pets contain a series of letters written by two household pets to one another. The series of letters are initiated by Katrina von Cat, the Master of Wisdom and Knowledge. Katrina is an 8 year-old grey tabby who takes great offense when Stanley – the 3-year old black Labrador/Rottweiler mix who resides in her home but whom she has successfully ignored until now – refuses to stop eating her food. When Stanley turns a deaf ear to Katrina's earnest entreaties, she drags him to Kitty Court, where he is put on trial for his "crimes".

These letters perfectly convey the character of the authors and the distinct differences in character between cats and dogs! It also sets the stage not only for their ongoing series of letters on various topics of importance to them, but provides a backdrop for the introduction of a few additional characters as well!

I really enjoyed the exchange of letters between Stanley and Katrina and, as someone who has simultaneously shared my home with cats and dogs, truly appreciated the humor in the book! Two of my favorite moments were Stanley's shock at the revelation of who the Cat Council really is (warning – don't let your dog see this!) and the scene in which Stanley and Katrina are scrambling to escape their mortal enemy, the vacuum cleaner. Oh, and in case you were wondering how your pets react to your beautifully decorated

Christmas tree during the holidays – this book will confirm your worst suspicions!

If your child loves animals, be sure to add The Perpetual Papers Of The Pack Of Pets to their reading list! Cat and dog lovers will delight in this book, and will be counting down the days to the sequel that is in the works!

Carla Peele says

I won this on a goodreads giveaway, and just finished reading it with my eight-year-old son; I think I enjoyed it just as much as he did! (by the way, my copy was adorably signed by all "3" authors {Stanley, Katrina and Felicia}.)

Katrina Von Cat, the Master of Wisdom and Knowledge has had it up to here with the roommate her owners have foisted upon her, and so she starts corresponding with him to try to teach him manners. Stanley, being a dog, thinks Katrina is mental. But, they soon become "frenemies", with some adorable characters peeking in along the way, such as Mr. Fluffypants, AKA Zorg the Space Guinea Pig and Mandy the Bluebird, who is a Professor of all things Winter.

The book is hilarious and adorable for all ages-- and would make an awesome Pixar cartoon! :D Great job, and I'm so thrilled I won the copy to be able to share with my children.

Elizabeth Flint says

A fantastic story of the daily frivolity between a demur diva kitty and her roguish, rascally puppy friend. The letters written back and forth, along with the narrator's take, provide a glimpse into a pet's day. Fun reading for anyone!!
