SL Gibson says

A good light read which can be used to introduce a discussion with children on sickness/attending hospital for treatment. This is a story of a young girl called Tanya who falls ill and her parents have to take her to hospital. It explores her diagnosis and treatment and side-effects, and how her mum makes her feel special again by the help of a "magic" scarf.

I liked the way West Indian phrases and tones were used - it was as if you could hear the spoken words. Everyone knows Grandma - I liked her. I also liked the idea of the school support given to Tanya. What I felt was missing was more of the after treatment story and the scarfs which made her feel so special. The pictures help readers to explore children thoughts away from only the written words. Overall, this was a good book which touches discussion points parents can use to aid conversations with children around cancer and treatment. I liked it.
