(The Destiny Bay Romances all take place in the same world and are loosely connected--but each story can stand on its own and each contains love scenes.)

Pals--they're just pals.

And that's all they'll ever be. You see, Taylor Lee is still healing from a rotten childhood and Kai Carrington is trying to make a career out of skimming the surface of the good life. She's chasing success; he's obsessed with staying playboy single, but both hit the wall of doubt when they find twin babies on the doorstep. A crazy weekend with diapers and lullabies opens them to something new--including some sexy romance that goes way beyond being "pals". And when Taylor starts auditioning other guys as husband/father-of-twins material, Kai begins to panic. Doesn't he want to play that part himself? Maybe it's time to let his heart decide and turn his "pal" into a life partner.

The fourth and final book in The Islanders - Destiny Bay Romances series. Another cozy romance that leaves you feeling good. Sorry to see the series end.

Had so suspend WAY too much disbelief with this one. You find babies on a doorstep and you don't notify the authorities, and you let some man that you just met help with them?!?! NOPE!

Rosemary Hughes says

Some people may have freaked, finding a basket with twins in it, abandoned on the doorway. However, these two strangers came together and a HEA was achieved in the end.
