Windows to Our World: Sarah's Journal - Growing Up, Crossing Oceans, Finding Love and Giving Life to 10 Children Sarah Janisse Brown

A world traveling mom of ten unlocks her journal and opens the windows to a life full of adventure, love, risk, mystery and faith! This is one family's quest for purpose, peace and simplicity in a wild world full of irresistible opportunities!

From one adventure to the next, Sarah Janisse Brown tells the story of God's love for her and how that love led her to an adoring husband, ten talented and creative children, and a life of both settling down and going abroad.

From her early stories about learning to read and building a cabin in the woods, to her first-hand experience with two wars in Eastern Europe, to her family's appearance on a reality television show, Windows to our World will keep you turning the pages and wondering what the Lord could possibly have in store next for the Brown Family.

The journal entries and poetry woven throughout the book also provide a more personal glimpse into Sarah's inspiration as a wife, mother, artist, home educator, and entrepreneur.

Don't miss this epic adventure story of God's love and providence in one family's life.

I skimmed a lot of the "witness to God" parts which I found a bit over the top, but it was important to her, so it's all good. Beyond that I love her writing style, which is upbeat and full of humor.

Starting in her youth, growing up in a large, eclectic family environment she journeys through the difficult teen years, meeting, falling in love and being courted by her future husband and eventually marriage, children and multiple moves around the US and the world.

It's an uplifting story of one families journey through life and well worth the read.

This book left me at awe as to what this couple have accomplished in their young lives. It also left me with a sense of peace as I eagerly read through Sarah's beautiful style of writing.

3.5 stars.

The first half of this story is about how Sarah grew up and what her childhood was like. I found it really unique and wonderful to read. Then she goes into her love story which takes a big chunk of it, and is quite cute, though it certainly shows the generation of the 90s and the push for purity and thankfully that worked out well for her. The end of the book talks about her journey into motherhood for her first 9 children. Since then she has 15 kids, I think a couple of them were adopted recently, but I don't follow her blog or really know much about her. I just wanted to read this because I thought it was going to have more about missions work, but honestly, there wasn't enough detail in that part of her story as I hoped for. It was still a good book to read.

I really enjoyed reading about this homeschooling family who was able to travel the world and experiment with a number of different lifestyle choices. They didn't let 10 kids slow them down. Great fun!

Lexi Zuo says

Beautiful story to see the way God has worked in someone's life over the years! Also super neat to see how their business allows them to live abroad and serve in missions.

Uplifting

I enjoyed this book very much. The author has more energy and talent than I ever had, but she inspired me to do some of the things that I've let slide -- reading my Bible more, writing more about my blessings in my journal, enjoying nature more. Parents of young children could benefit greatly by reading about some of the child rearing techniques and activities to keep children learning, becoming responsible family members, and having creative fun. This family relies on is God's will for their lives.

Emma Filbrun says

I always enjoy reading about the lives of other mothers with a number of children. In Windows to Our World, Sarah, who happens to be only two years younger than me, tells the story of her life from a young girl to becoming the mother of 10. She was raised in a Christian home, with a pastor father and an artist mother, and many of her weekends as a girl were spent at art fairs as her mother sold her paintings. In seventh grade, Sarah's mother pulled her out of school and began to homeschool her, which turned out to be a wonderful choice for Sarah. After completing the lessons her mother required in math, Sarah followed her own interests for the remainder of her schooling, often becoming so engrossed in what she was learning about that she had to be pulled away from her books for meals!

It's rare that I give a book five stars. Even some classics just aren't as great as they are made to be. This book, however, is special. Or maybe I just discovered it at a special time in my life. Sarah formed through so many adventures and ups and downs. She started over often. Right now I am homeschooling and embarking on a new adventure... college. And while college isn't as drastic as taking my family to live in the Ukraine, it has caused some adjustments.

I am also delving into delight-directed schooling. Reading how Sarah learned in her homeschool as a child was inspiring.

Lizibeth says

I really enjoyed reading about her life and family. She gives me hope and encouragement in my own journey as a mom of many.

I received a copy of this book through a giveaway here on Goodreads, and I am certainly glad I did. This story of a mom with nine, soon to be 10, children serving the Lord in so many ways, and in so many places, was extremely encouraging to read. As a teacher, the homeschooling and dyslexic aspects of the story truly interested me, and the way the book is written makes it very easy to read. Ms. Brown seems to be a very optimistic person who has a wonderful, vibrant faith. Perhaps it would have been nice to see a few more of the struggles her family endured, but this uplifting, encouraging book made me hope she writes more about the future experiences they have in years to come.

I LOOOOOOOVVVVEEEEE THIS BOOK!!!! I have read this book 4 times and working on 5th.
I LOVE THIS BOOK!!!!

Hope says

This was a wonderful read. It was like reading through letters from a new friend, by the end you truly felt like she was an old friend just sharing the latest family news.

Reading about her struggles and fears made everything more real. She isn't a super woman, she's normal, with fears and misgivings like the rest of us. I love her general attitude towards life! :-)

Elizabeth Bromley says

Fantastic read!

I can not urge you to read this book enough! Growing up in a Christian family, finding your own relationship with God, falling in love, God's calling on your life, living a life of blessing and joy, motherhood, homeschooling, education, dyslexia, missions, traveling and entrepreneurship! Something for everyone. This book has touched my heart and renewed my dreams!
