It has a bio of each featured artist, they all use photography in some way. it seems very fresh, and i am still reading it. slow going due to busy schedule.

Overall an excellent survey of contemporary photography, representing major themes among artists today. Essays are of varying quality, I felt. With this more than the drawing book in the same Phaidon series, I questioned why certain artists were included / excluded.

Basic encyclopedia of sorts of contemporary photographers.

The stinkers tortured me over one hundred and twenty-five dollars. But they never got my contract. Hahaha. Does anyone want to buy my essay?

I think someone does not understand how the periodic table works.
(Hint: not alphabetically.)

This collection left me lukewarm. It did introduced me to a few interesting artists, so at free from the library it was fine, but you probably don't want to rush out and buy it. I hear the other volumes in the set are better, though.

In lieu of a review, some pictures. Not all from this book, btw; I just went with the artists names rather than making the added effort to find the exact pieces. Many of the ones I came up with I think are actually more interesting than the ones included in the collection.

Yeondoo Jung's series "Wonderland" creates the scenes from childrens' drawings.

Practically everything by Ryan McGlinley is nudes. NSFW.

Sanguinetti's series "Adventures of Guille & Belinda" is all these two cousins enacting various stage pieces, paintings, and other stories.

Paul Sietsema has, per internet, been transitioning away from photo and film toward mostly painting.

A great selection of contemporary photographers from all over the world. There are a few photographs by each artist accompanied by a brief column of text. My goal was to read the text for all 121 photographers, but I ended up just flipping through the photographs over and over again. After about 12 weeks of hoarding it in my bedroom I had to give it back to the library....I think I googled at least half of them, though. I'm surprised that most of them don't have websites. What is the deal with that?
