The Cutting Room: Episode I Edward W. Robertson

In the future, there are many parallel Earths--but only one of them has time travel. Its criminals break into the pasts of other worlds, far beyond the reach of conventional police.

Blake Din is the top agent of the Cutting Room, the group tasked with stopping these trespassers. But on a mission to undo the murder of a young boy, he steps into a far-ranging conspiracy. For the first time, it isn't one of the other Earths under attack. It's his own.

A sci-fi thriller in the mold of Minority Report and Quantum Leap, THE CUTTING ROOM: EPISODE I is the first in a six-part serial novel. New episodes weekly.

So, I have no idea when I got this novella, but it was on my Kobo, filed under a TBR shelf, and accidentally opened today. So I read it. At 126 pages, it was the perfect fill for some unexpected downtime. Now, this is Episode I, and the entire collection is called The Cutting Room The Complete Season, and it really did come through as if it were a teleplay! Pretty cool.

I don't read a lot of sci-fi, and I was really pleased with this. It's a time-travel / parallel universe thing, but set pretty much in the here and now. There were no weird names or hi-tech SFX with dodgy explanations.

Blake Din travels in time to prevent the murder of a child. The prose is quick and light, and the pages [virtual ones] practically flipped themselves. There were some small twists and one really surprising one. Definitely, I'll be checking out the other episodes.

I love time split books, and this one is a good one. It's also a serial book so we get the story split into 6 parts. Blake is a time cutter, someone who gets sent back into our past to solve crimes. It was fun to see him struggle without the internet.

This intriguing tale, part of a new serialized series following time-traveler Blake Din on a quest to stop the brutal murder of a young boy, was a good read that definitely left me with the desire to see what happens next. Robertson has set up a sympathetic character in Din and has my interest peaked to see what happens in Episode II.

A Reader's Heaven says

A sci-fi/thriller about a group of time travellers who are sent through time to stop - if possible - heinous crimes being committed. This is one "chapter" of a series of stories by the author.

I will start by saying that this should have rated higher. The first half of the story was very good. The "why" and "how" of everything was explained. The writing itself was crisp and well done. I was dragged into the story easily. I was really enjoying it.

Sadly, the second half of the story was not as good. The story starts to become repetitive (this was going to be hard to avoid - the character is following the potential victim so a lot of the day-to-day stuff is going to be the same) and it falls a little bit flat at the end.

I am still considering whether to read more of this series.

S.M. Reine says

I write violent books, but I'm a huge friggin' weenie when it comes to child characters. I just can't tolerate adorable kids in peril. That's the premise of the first episode here: a child is going to be murdered, and the POV character has jumped back in time to prevent it.

I had to read this episode peeking through my fingers, pretty much. It was really intense, really difficult to read, and yet so suspenseful that I couldn't stop. It's good stuff - I bet people who aren't giant weenies would like it even more.

Highly recommended for non-weenies that like thrillers.

This has been my favorite of Robertson's so far. Quick easy read... I like this introduction to the serial format... the only problem is that I will probably read faster than they will be released.
