"All I ask is a tall ship, and a star to steer her by." From the earliest days of explorations, there has always been one tried-and-true way to navigate through uncharted reaches and one to find the way home -- the stars. Ancient mariners prized their star charts, knowing that they could guide them safely into a friendly port or lead them to the reaches of the mysterious East. Modes of transportation have changes but the stars are still our constant. When man took his first step into space armed with the very latest in computers, he took with him the same tool for reading the stars that the men who sailed under canvas carried.

When humans launched the first ship designed for long-range missions into the deep waters of interstellar space, the Vulcan High Command provided their star charts for the "Enterprise"(TM). But Jonathan Archer was not content with relying on the known. Although he used the Vulcan charts, he also added to them, and greatly expanded Starfleet's knowledge of the galaxy. Every generation of starship captain that followed has built on Archer's first steps.

Follow the course set by Archer, Kirk, Picard, Sisko, and Janeway. Relive their extraordinary adventures as you find here, for the first time, the star maps that chart the routes these famous explorers took.

John Yelverton says

A fascinating book about where events take place in the Star Trek universe, but it was not as clear and concise as I would have liked it to be.

Dustin says

Finally you have a resource to turn to when you want to prove that the Cardassian Union is nowhere near Romulan space!

Joking aside this is a neat reference for the series and should be a part of any Trekkies collection.

John says

could have been a little clearer

Daniel Kukwa says

Now THIS is wonderful. Astonomical maps, star charts...a real sense of scope that reveals how big our galaxy truly is...and where the great powers of the Star Trek universe fit into this stellar puzzle. My only real complaint is that it deserves MORE text commentary, to compliment the images and maps.

Benjamin Plume says

I like Star Trek, and I like maps. What can I say?
