The X-men and Magneto's Evil Mutants are trying to poach mutants for their respective causes. Both groups try to get Namor/the Sub-mariner, basically the Marvel version of DCs Aquaman, on their side. Magneto tries to seduce Namor with the Scarlet Witch. (Seriously, so glad I'm in the modern feminist times. It's the 6th issue of X-men and these women are super stereotypical. This issue starts with Jean cooking for everyone because the cook is off for a day.) In the end Magneto and his gang runs away and Namor goes back into the sea. (He's the prince of atlantis and he hates humans for some reason. He had a cameo in the almighty Thor, when Thor is stuck on Earth and he's showing Jane the wonders of the world on a chariot.) One of the last lines are from Jean, stating that she's glad that the Scarlet Witch has run off with Magneto because she is just too good looking. What the actual F??!! Jean, one of the most powerful telepaths the world has ever seen, is so annoyed/jealous of another beautiful woman that standing in the same vicinity as her makes her feel uncomfortable.

I'm very glad I went back and read these comics because it helped me appreciate how much character's and stories have evolved over time. I've grown up in a world that promotes strong female characters and role models that I started taking them for granted. I know use of female stereotypes is subtle but it's there and reading these fifty years after they were published gives some insight into what people felt was normal back then when it came to the female presence in comics.

I'm going to read other older comics and see whether the byline makes a difference.

Nothing new here. X men and the Brotherhood are looking to recruit the submariner. For me submariner was a very strange dude with outlandish eyebrows and wings on his ankle. Looks like stan lee is running out of good plots and marvel is up at doing crossovers this early.

quick silver and the scarlet witch this it is amazing how these guys never age !!! how i rate the comic is actually compared to what was back then not comparing them to the current era of comics not even the past eras i am comparing them to their own era and they were very promising after all look how many teams have spawned off the x-men and how many more there will be i remember telling a friend of mine before that the creation of x-men is the best team creation in marvel history while spider-man is the best solo hero marvel has ever made and the changes and evolution they both has gone through is incredible and they will never run out of stories for both of them
