At First Sight Mihir Kamat

At First Sight is a collection of short stories that touch upon delicate relationships in a special way, where each story explores the minds of its characters and how they go about their lives with love playing its part.

Join the author as he takes you on a journey into the magical world of love, where even a moment seems precious than a lifetime. Bear witness as a man declares his love for his woman. Feel close to a father's heart as he cares for his newborn child. Or live the life of a grandfather for whom the happiness of his granddaughter means more than the world. Live each story as if it were your own.

As me and fortune never sees eye to eye, winning a giveaway in goodreads can be termed as a miracle. A small book of 72 pages with twelve short stories celebrating love; a simple but smart cover page featuring a pair of eyes (a tiny glitch I can see is that the eyes speak of an untold woe not of love) and there is the matter of font -- all the stories are given in italics which by the way looks beautiful, but makes the reading miserable in the long run.

First few stories are the usual cliched ones with unsurprising endings; I can find few novelties in narrative style but things get better when stories get out of man-woman relationships; there are some I felt quite rewarding like 'In a Manner of Thinking', 'Everything' (grandfather-granddaughter relationship), and 'The final dance' (really interesting as the story leaves many loose ends).

Thank you Mihir for sending me a copy through goodreads. A signed copy from the author is something I will cherish always.
