There is a house...

Ten years ago, a sole survivor escaped. Running screaming into the night, he would never be the same. The costume party he attended turned into a slaughter. Thirteen victims butchered by a psychotic guest. It was only the latest chapter in a nightmarish history steeped in blood. The Devil's House laid dormant until now.

Hollywood special effects wizard Lee Masters made the Devil's House the location for the fifth installment of his annual Halloween attraction. Extreme Haunt is the most intense haunted house event in America. Sick gore, crazy scares, great live actors and insane makeup effects; the attraction has everything this year, including real monsters.

Possessed by an evil entity, the haunted house performers are transformed into vicious blood-thirsty beasts. The cannibal butcher in the kitchen, the zombies in the basement and the Satanic sadist roaming the halls are hellbent on killing Extreme Haunt's final guests. The doors are locked, and the gateway to hell has opened. This is a Halloween no one will ever forget.

Dawn Obrien says

I won this book off the Good reads giveaway. It was a very good and unique horror book. It is definitely not for the faint of heart. It is full of sexual references and gore. I would recommend this book to anyone who enjoys scary books.

I received this book as part of a Goodreads giveaway. I entered the contest before Halloween and at the time was in the mood for a spooky, creepy, monstrous story. I wasn't so much in the mood after Halloween, but I gave it a try. There were bits that were a little graphic for me, but I was drawn into the story and wanted to keep reading to see who would survive (if any). One of my worst nightmares is to visit a haunted house that turns all too real. Even though we don't get to know that characters good enough to form a great bond and understanding of them, we can easily put ourselves in their shoes and feel the horror and desperation. Great read, goes fast, and the ending set up leaves it open for things to come...
