I read this to cleanse my palate of all the supernatural/urban fantasy stuff floating around nowadays. I generally like Meagan McKinney's style and hadn't read this one yet. However, I am not liking it much at all. The heroine is TSTL with misplaced loyalties to a vigilante group and an obviously mentally ill friend who probably needs some medical attention.

The hero and heroine have zero chemistry other than a case of instant lust on the hero's part. The villain is just so obvious that our heroine knows within an instant of meeting him that he is a killer yet no one can figure it out. Plus the whole bit about this killer being the only "monogomist serial killer in history"...what?...look up the definition of "serial" please...

Add to that is the whole neon-orange lipstick plot device. My lipstick doesn't last past lunch. They are telling me that the lipstick on this murder victim was intact for five years??

This book found itself on my reading list after it was recommended (it was on one of those Top 100 Romances lists, or something like that). However, there were things here I just couldn't appreciate, since I hate oldskool romance.

The biggest issues I had were with the two main characters. The heroine was just way too spineless at certain moments, and also she could be really stupid for someone who finished law school at the top of her class. The hero, on the other hand, irritated me with his insistence that he was baaaaaad, and his stupidity (view spoiler). Also, there was some "forceful seduction" that didn't leave a good impression.

I can see how this book could have been great/revolutionary more than fifteen years ago, but today there are much better romances, in my opinion. If this book were not a romance, but a mystery in the vein of Tess Gerritsen, the grade (and my enjoyment) would have been higher. ...more

I liked some other books from this author but this one was not my cup of tea. It took me days to finish it. Mystery with not mystery in it. Romance was not felt much either. Strange things occur like parents keep reminded their murdered daughter by her twins sister, their other daughter. Twins` parents would know very well that they would never mistake their twins as each of them distinct to the parents like any siblings who are not twin siblings.
