A Claire Gulliver Mystery

The fourth adventure in the Claire Gulliver Mystery series is set on a cruise ship heading for Alaska.

Since she was a child, Claire Gulliver had seen the gleaming white cruise ships slipping under the Golden Gate Bridge heading for adventure on the high seas. Finally she was on board.

She and her friend, travel book writer, Lucy Springer, join her mother, Millie Gulliver and her mother's long time friend, Ruth Clarkson, on board the luxurious ship Dreamy Seas for a cruise to Alaska. They are all looking forward to hanging out with the 'girls', being pampered by the ship's personnel and exploring the picturesque gold rush towns of Alaska.

They feel exceeding lucky to be seated at a dinner table with six other interesting people, including three single men. At first it appears that Lucy's objective of finding them eligible men for dance partners, as well as add a little romance to the excursion, is going to be easily met, but unfortunately, some of the candidates have other agendas. Nothing is ever what it seems and as usual Claire is in the middle of it all. Only this time her mother is right by her side.

If you've been cruising you'll want to be on board; if you've never cruised here is your opportunity to see what it's like. ALL ABOARD!

I found this book while on vacation and decided to read it because it was a mystery. I read it even though it was geared toward women who love a good mystery. Once I start a book I have to finish it. Can you guess that this is the first piece of chick lit (please do not take offense) I have ever read? I was looking for something light and it fit the bill although I would have preferred a more thrilling adventure story.

The story takes place on a cruise to Alaska with Claire Gulliver and her mom as passengers along with a few chosen colorful characters, those that happen to be seated with them every night at the dinner table. That is one place I have to see and a cruise might be just the ticket. Gayle Wigglesworth came up with a neat idea. She has included a Call of the Sea cruise itinerary just inside the front cover, a spiffy way to get the reader to begin turning the pages. Some reviewers have said that Gayle's characters are not developed enough, I disagree. I believe the type of novel determines the degree to which the characters need to be developed... this is light fiction, a quick fun read.

Very often older people are ignored especially in today's society. I give Gayle credit for her creation of a very crucial character, the 92 year-old Mrs. Bernbaum. The colorful descriptions of her past made this read quite enjoyable. Sadly, the only thing that detracted from the read was the editing, other than that, I quite liked Cruisin' for a Bruisin'. Would I read another book like this.... maybe.
